City Attorney Thomas John was yesterday admitted to practice before the State Supreme court on motion of S. A. King.

Parothy Lewis appeared in "Alone in Greater New York" at the Provo opera house Thursday evening. Miss Lewis is good, the scenic effects are fair and some of the muscled specialties were enjoyed. We must say, however, that the support in the main is very poor. Only a small house attended the performance, most of whom were, however, well satisfied.

Uncle Jesse Knight of Knightsville, the home of the Hunting and Uncle Sam mines, came in from Thule yesterday morning, and after a little shopping left for the south again last night. Of his own properties the visitor says that while they are still turning out their riches, he is just now doing a large amount of exploratory work in new ground, and hopes to have a number of new ore bodies blocked out before spring.—Salt Lake Tribune, Friday.

Sportsmen's Meeting.

Pursuant to call the people interested in the preservation of fish and game met this morning. Owing to the large crowd present the meeting was held in the district court room instead of at C. F. Decker & Co.'s, as originally intended. R. A. Birney was elected chairman and Geo. E. Howe secretary. After some discussion the following committee was appointed to consider the present fish and game law and prepare changes recommended: R. A. Birney, M. Newell, M. P. Madsen, G. E. Howe, J. A. Ovard, J. Clark, J. Madsen. Meeting adjourned to 2 p.m. to allow committee time to prepare report. The meeting is in session as we go to press.

A Veteran.

Chicago News: "Why should Blakeley boast about his bravery?" He has never been a soldier, has he?"

"No, but he was a member of a church choir for several years."

THE GIBSON GIRL.

Famous Model Tells of Her Artistic and Dramatic Career.

Boston Post: Everybody has either seen or heard of the "Gibson girl," that tall, willowy type of feminine beauty which Charles Dana Gibson, the illustrator, has made celebrated all over the world, equaled in fame only by Du Maurier's English girl. The model from whose classic outline Mr. Gibson derived inspiration is at present in Boston, and strange to say, she is playing at the Hollis in the role of Queen Flavia, one of the characters for which she posed.

Her name is Jobyna Howland, and she was born in Colorado not so very many years ago. She said last evening:

"Yes, they call me the 'Gibson girl,' and I am afraid just at present I am better known through the fame of that artist than from my dramatic ability. I have posed many times, not only for Mr. Gibson, but for other noted New York artists, who seem to admire tall and slender femininity in preference to the more robust. I have sat for all sorts of subjects, angles, head and shoulders, ideal pictures and the like."

"No, I never was painted from the nude. Not that I think there is any particular harm, and had I begun early in my career, would not have given the matter a moment's consideration. And they tell me, too, that I have a good figure, with no irregular lines. But I can't do quite begin now."

"Of course, I prefer acting. My parents, the stage and Kipling are the things I most love in this world. I have been on the stage but a little over a year, because I never could secure just what I wanted. The stage and three comedy acts to me is the score, but I do not think I should shun in that line.

"How tall am I? A little less than six feet. About so much less," and Miss Howland held up the very tip of a tiny little finger. I am not at all sensitive on the subject. Indeed, I rather glory in the fact that I am taller than any woman I know, not excepting Julie Opp, who is not short by any means."

Miss Howland is a rare example of feminine beauty. Notwithstanding her height, she weighs less than 150 pounds. Yet she is perfectly proportioned, and is as graceful as a willow wand. Her hair is Auburn, her eyes blue, and her features of the classic type. As Flavia in "Rupert of Hentzau" she has a most queenly appearance.

When asked about her first name, Jobyna, she said: Father's name was Job, but mother didn't like it, so she called him Joby. When I came along they tacked the 'na' on to father's name and called me Jobyna."

Conference at Provo.

For the Quarterly Stake Conference of the Relief Society of Utah Stake at Provo Friday, January 19th, and the Stake Conference at the same place January 14th and 15th, the R. G. W. will make a rate of one single fare for round trip from all points in Utah county. Selling dates January 13th, 14th and 15th. Good returning until January 16th.
